THE CARE OF WHEELS.

Economical Hints For Owners of Bicycles.

Only a careful person deserves to own a wheel. The mechanism of a good bieyele is more delicate than a watch, and needs the greatest care and attention.

To take care of a bicycle properly requires knowledge, patience and a certain amount of mechanical skill. It should be a matter of pride to the owner to keep his or her wheel as fresh and smart-looking as when purchased.

In the first place, before starting out, the whole machine must be thoroughly oiled, but if this is done carelessly a good deal of damage is bound to result, for nothing collects dust and dirt so surely as a joint surface reeking with oil. A dry rag, therefore, should be kept in the tool bag to wipe up with the oil which requires unabsorbed, while care must also be taken that no oil gets on the tires, for any kind of grease is inju- 7:30 by Rev. Mr. Hunring, of Virious to india rubber.

But when the long day's work is Presbyterian -Services at 11 a. m. cleaned before it or its owner retires Lord's Supper at close of morning to rest. Every part should be wiped free of mud or dust; the spokes should be rubbed bright, and every joint left as "clean as a whistle." It is also advisable to let a little air out of the tires, so that they shall not be kept on a tension.

But even if all this is done with regularity it is not enough, as there are som · parts which can only be reached in a general "cleaning up" once a fortnight, or perhaps oftener if the wheel has much use The axles, balls and chain should be taken out and every particle of accumulated grease or dirt removed. Great care should be taken at such times that every bolt, serew, etc., is restored to its proper p ace.

At first this di-integration of the various parts seem an impossible task to one who knows nothing of mechanies, but brains supply the lack of experience, and any intelligent person can easily master the necessary details, while the consciousness of a complete understanding of its mechanism establishes a sympathy with the wheel that a constant rider will find invaluable,

But even with the greatest care, pieveles, like everything else, me bound to get shabby in time. A few touches of paint now and then will serve to put off the final day of renovation, but when this no longer A roduction in charges will be made suffices, and the machine begins to have a mottled look and the spokes to look rusty and tarnished, there is nothing for it but a thorough overhauling.

To do this, first get the frame clear of the other parts, patting each one carefully aside, with its nots and serows so that there may be no perplexity when it is necessary to put them together. Then scrape offevery particle of the old paint from the frame with an old kitchen knife (it is impossible to sandpaper it off satisfactority), and when a perfectly smooth suface is obtained cover it entirely with a covering of black enam-

After the frame is painted go over each part successively. The ch-in will probably be found very much clogged with grease and dirt; for this a couple of hours' sonking in a bath of potash is the best remedy. To make the bath take two tablespoonfuls of potash to a basin of water. If the chain is steel the rust can be removed by putting it in water to which has been added a tenspoonful of sulphuric acid, but this should only be applied to steel, as it would eat away nickel plating.

If the time of the wheels are of wood a good sandpapering and a coat of varnish will make them look as good as new. If they have metal ic rims it is a good plan to remove the tires and take the rims and spokes to a place where they do nickel plating and have them entirely plated. Tois ests emparatively little, and orrtainly the great improvement in the appearance is worth a little expense.

It may thus be seen that with a little care and trouble and a work nanlike knowledge of the machine a wheel may be kept in perfect shape, an las anyone's bicycle nowadays is su jected to a fire of criticism and comment, the owner should have as much pride in its appearance as in his or her dress or carriage.
